

DETROIT

PRODUCE for PANTRIES

Food insecurity in Detroit is almost double the national average, which means many families do not know where their next meal is coming from. At the same time, emergency food pantry clients face a limited selection of fresh produce at pantries mostly stocked with processed food.

GROWERS LIKE YOU CAN HELP

Keep Growing Detroit and Gleaners Community Food Bank are partnering with Detroit food pantries to connect growers with extra produce to pantries in need of fresh food.

When you find yourself with extra produce throughout the year, consider donating to one of our partners below. Your produce donations can inspire new gardeners and increase food security in Detroit. To participate, you should have a safe soil sample on file with Keep Growing Detroit. Haven't tested your soil yet? Contact us, we can help!

FARM TO PANTRY

Helpful tips for donation

HARVESTING

Rules of thumbs for produce quality & quantity:

- The best time to harvest is in the morning before produce gets too hot.
- For leafy greens, pull off damaged or yellowed leaves at harvest. Submerge greens in cool water to remove field heat shortly after harvest to prevent wilting. Not all produce should be washed - see below.
- If harvesting more than 12 hours before donating, some produce will need to be kept cold - see below.
- Donate produce that you would eat. Some holes and light damage is okay; no bugs or rot.
- Donate enough for someone to make a meal with. Suggested minimum donations: one head/bag of lettuce, 1 large or 2 small zucchinis, 1 bunch of beets.

PROCESSING & STORING

All produce should be dirt-free and properly stored before donating.

TRANSPORT

- Dry all produce thoroughly before packaging it for delivery.
- Deliver produce in a clean container, some pantries will have containers for transfer.
- Bag or bundle the produce into 1lb or larger unit sizes when possible; loose produce will also be accepted.

DELIVERY

- Please clearly label crops or include a list of what crops you are donating.
- Check in with the pantry coordinator when you arrive and fill out the donation log.
- Stay to volunteer when possible.
